Company tells former drivers to get ready for its return

Helen Pike Metro | Calgary

Uber's road back to Calgary has been a bumpy one, but there are some signs up ahead, and they're giving both customers and drivers hope.

On July 27, Uber sent an email to some Calgary operators who were out of a job in February when Uber ceased operations. The message is clear: Think ahead and get your class 4 licence; we'll even pay you $200 when we're back up and running.

The company was shut down by a court injunction — and subsequently pulled out of the Calgary market when councillors voted in favour of a bylaw that "broke the rideshare model."

When asked about returning to Calgary, Uber's spokesperson responded with "We are still working with the City of Calgary and the Mayor's office," noting "if and when" they return, the court injunction - which is still in place - is expected to be withdrawn as a formality.

The company still doesn't have a TNC licence with the City of Calgary.

A few weeks ago, a couple of Calgary job postings made waves with Uber hopefuls who speculated this was the first sign of their return. Then, these emails sent some other drivers springing into action to get their Class 4 licences.

Once Uber relaunches, the email says drivers need only prove their Class 4 status and complete 50 trips to collect the

It's worth the investment, according to the company because they "hope to be back."

City says drop in youth not necessarily tied to economy

DEMOGRAPHICS

Experts watch baby bust from early '90s move through system

Brodie Thomas Metro | Calgary

Leila Chaa says moving away from Calgary is a bittersweet change for her.

The 23-year-old completed a business degree at the University of Calgary in June but she had been applying for jobs since the start of 2016.

"At first I'd been applying massively within Calgary only. Then in April I thought, 'Maybe I should apply to Vancouver and Toronto."

She said she received no calls back from her local applications but had two follow-ups from larger companies in Toronto. She's now starting an internship with General Electric.

"That made me rethink my whole strategy," she said. "Not even two months and a company from Toronto calls me."

Chaa may be part of an exodus of people aged 20-24 seeking work outside Calgary.

The City of Calgary's recent census showed that age group was the only population to register a decline from the previous 2014 census.

POPULATION

- Calgary's age 20-24 demographic dropped 4,025 when compared with 2014.
- This was the only age group to see a population drop in the 2016 city census.
- Alberta saw 17,883 new residents in 2016.

Michele Broadhurst of the city's Planning and Development Department said there are probably two reasons for the decline. The first has nothing to do with the economy.

"It's sort of demographic," said Broadhurst. "We saw a smaller birthrate with smaller family sizes in the '90s, and that sort of baby bust is working its way through the system."

She said forecasters expect the slump to work its way through the system over the next decade.

However, Broadhurst notes that this is the age group with the most mobility and the most willing to move for work — before they've married or settled down with mortgages.

In that way, the drop could be somewhat tied to the economy.

"The changes do correlate with the unemployment rate. If the jobs aren't here, they'll go elsewhere to find them," she said.

Leila Chaa moved to Calgary when she was in Grade 10 and completed a business degree at the U of C. She's now heading east after finding no job offers at home. JENNIFER FRIESEN/FOR METRO

ENERGY

Prices true trigger of deal return, say experts

Jeremy Simes For Metro | Calgary

Instead of increasing the carbon levy on emitters, market prices may be the actual trigger causing power companies to return their agreements, according to economic and legal experts.

On Monday, the NDP government launched a lawsuit over the "Enron clause," which allows power companies to return their agreements if government action makes them unprofitable.

Deputy Premier Sarah Hoffman said the government wasn't aware of the clause until the energy minister was briefed in March, seven months after the government increased the carbon levy on large emitters in June.

On Thursday, Nigel Bankes, chair of natural-resources law at U of C, said it appears the energy companies are using the hike in the carbon levy in June as a trigger for lower profits today, even though a September briefing note suggested the power purchase agreements (PPAs) would remain profitable in the future.

Trevor Tombe, economist with U of C, suggested the value of PPAs has largely decreased because the price of electricity is at historic lows.

"The only thing that has changed is that the price has fallen," Tombe said. "So in that sense, one might conclude the policy change at the time it was made didn't constitute a trigger."

Suspected arson in northeast

Fire levelled two structures and torched several cars in a suspicious fire at an industrial site in northeast Calgary early Thursday.

Firefighters were called out to a car recycling location in the 2700 block of 5 Ave NE around 1 a.m. Thursday and upon arrival saw two separate buildings alit along with several vehicle. At that point, fire officials called out a second alarm due to the size of the fire.

Firefighters battled the blaze on two fronts and also dealt with several small explosions on scene from vehicle gas tanks exploding on the property.

One firefighter suffered an injury to his hand.

Fire crews had the area cordoned off as the Calgary Police Service arson investigators were called to the scene.

A woman is in critical condition after being struck by a vehicle in northwest Calgary Thursday morning.

Calgary police say another woman was backing her Honda CRV out of her driveway in the 100 block of Hawkwood Drive NW when she struck the other woman.

The victim was walking her dog at the time. Police are still searching for the dog, which is black in colour and wearing a leash.

There were no other injured individuals reported at the scene.

Calgary to make 5 Avenue lane reversal permanent

URBAN PLANNING

Trial project successful in opening up traffic flow

Helen Pike Metro | Calgary

Two-way traffic on 5 Avenue SW may be here to stay, as the city aims to make a piloted lanereversal program permanent in the fall. On Oct. 15 2015, traffic on the busy one-way route was engineered into a two-way avenue between 5 Street SW and the west-end of downtown all days except from 6 a.m. to 9 a.m. on weekdays as a "trial." But after reviewing its effects, the city has decided to put permanent measures in place to keep their lane-reversal program running.

The city is doing more consultations with commuters, businesses and citizens in the area to make the reversal permanent as early as 2017.

Currently, pylons are still denoting the lane reversal, but if the city makes it permanent, there might be concrete barriers added, or other agreed upon measures.

According to 2015 data, the

It's part of a bigger plan of giving people more capacity to go westbound downtown.

Brittany Kustra

lane reversal system is being used at 60 per cent capacity. It's helped the city reroute an average of 850 vehicles from other roads during peak period times.

"There are a few reasons this was implemented, and it's part of a bigger plan of giving people more capacity to go westbound downtown," said roads spokeswoman Brittany Kustra.

Although the 4-car CTrains help those taking transit in and out of the core during peak periods, they've created bottlenecks for the regular commuters trying to get out of downtown. But the lane reversal program actually increases the city's capacity to help 700 more vehicles exiting the core westbound.

"At the intersection of 7 Avenue and 8 Street there tends to be a little bit of a bottleneck there, 4-car trains take more time to go through that intersection," Kustra said.

She said the city is pursuing public consultation on what a permanent fix would look like. When Calgarians come back from their summer vacations, consultation days should be on their way.

Study shows living disparity in Canada

HUMAN DEVELOPMENT

Alberta similar to Switzerland, Nunavut like Latvia: Analysis

Canada sits on an enviable top-10 perch when it comes to quality of life around the world, but a new analysis points to significant disparity among its provinces and territories.

Albertans, for example, enjoyed a quality of life in 2014 comparable to that found in countries like Switzerland or Denmark, says a new report that seeks to replicate the United Nations human development index for Canadian regions.

At the other end of the spectrum, says the report released Thursday, Nunavut would have had a quality of life similar to that of Latvia or Croatia.

Overall, Canada holds down the ninth spot on the 2015 UN index of 188 countries, which was based on 2014 data. It tied with New Zealand, one slot below the United States.

By comparison, if Alberta had been stacked up against countries on the list, it would have landed in fourth place - the highest among Canada's provinces and territories.

Nunavut would have ended up 46th, the report says.

"Although most Canadian provinces and territories achieve impressive ranks in the international context, evidently Canada's overall (human development index) masks substantial variation among the different regions," said The Centre for the Study of Living Standards.

The UN human development index is a frequently used tool that measures one country's standing with another. It combines data on life expectancy, education and gross national income to produce a ranking of the UN's member countries.

The study also ranked B.C. as the top-ranked Canadian region for life expectancy, while Nunavut was last. Compared to UN countries, Nunavut was No. 103 in life expectancy.

Man charged with murdering child

A charge of second-degree murder has been laid against a southern Alberta man accused of killing a nine-month-old boy who was left in his care.

Police in Lethbridge say Austin Wright wasn't breathing and was in cardiac arrest when paramedics found him in a home after answering an April 28 call that the baby had just stopped breathing, but an autopsy determined he died as a result of blunt force trauma not consistent with a fall.

Investigators say Austin had been left with his mother's boyfriend while she went to work, and that he was allegedly assaulted when he started crying.

Police work on inclusion, diversity plan

Gender equity strategies will be proposed to Commission

The Calgary Police Service's office of inclusion and development and employee engagement (OIDEE) presented their strategic framework to the Calgary Police Commission Tuesday, and are set to present an update as early as November.

Led by OIDEE, the CPS is working towards a "cultural shift" among their ranks in order to address emerging trends that impact employee wellness, engagement and career development things like gender diversity and equity.

One initiative OIDEE is focusing on is the development of a program called MARC (Men Advocating Real Change) seminars for improving gender equity.

"Men know they are part of the problem but don't know what to do about it or how to change it," said Insp. Mike Tillotson. The strategic framework also indicated CPS would deliver "Engaging Men in Gender Initiatives training."

"Gender equity issues involve both genders, so the traditional approach has always been focusing on one gender or the other but, recognizing men really do need to be involved in this discussion and need to be advocating for change," said Tillotson.

Tillotson said both men and women need to be involved in order to create make change.

"If anybody is left on the sidelines and isn't included in the discussion it means it's not working and quite frankly the likelihood of a culture change is unlikely," he said. CPC commissioner Diane Colley-Urquhart praised the CPS for their passion and work ethic on the project, but expressed concerns that it would be a "top down, trickle down inverse effect instead of happening organically."

Chief Roger Chaffin responded by saying the framework represented insight they'd received through member engagement.

"Awareness is nice," he said. But change is born by activity and we need to make sure we see that change."

SUSTAINABILITY

Suncor proposes way to cut emissions, costs

A proposal by oilsands giant Suncor Energy to leave some of its more difficult-to-produce reserves in the ground, to reduce emissions and costs, is being endorsed by environmentalists — but not by rival producer Cenovus Energy.

CEO Steve Williams said Suncor has asked the Alberta government to allow it to "strand" some of its oilsands reserves if they're too expensive to produce, or if they'd add too greatly to the intensity levels of its overall greenhouse gas emissions.

"We are advocating in a modest way to work with government so that we can strand some of the oil in the oilsands," said Williams on a conference call to discuss second-quarter financial results on Thursday.

He said Calgary-based Suncor can afford to leave oil behind because of its properties' "vast" holdings, which contain 8.7-billion barrels of oilsands reserves.

"Our regulation is written so that we take to a very high percentage the last piece of oil out. That tends to be the most expensive both economically and environmentally. What we would like to do is leave that last piece in (the ground).

"I'm very optimistic we are making some breakthroughs with government to do that."

Suncor's oilsands properties are leased from the province and it pays royalties based on how much it produces.

It has both oilsands strip mining projects and in situ projects where steam is injected through wells to melt the heavy bitumen so it can be pumped to surface.

In a sustainability report released last Thursday, Suncor vowed to reduce its overall emissions per barrel of oil and gas produced by 30 per cent by 2030.

Williams said on the call that stranding some of the resource could result in a 10 per cent to 20 per cent savings on operating costs for certain oilsands projects. Environmentalists said the idea has some merit.

"We would agree that Alberta's historic focus on maximizing oilsands production ... rather than optimizing production on the highest quality ore may be having unnecessary environmental impacts on things like greenhouse gas intensity and tailings production," said Simon Dyer of the Pembina Institute, a clean energy thinktank. # Mayor steps out to catch 'em all

'It's just Nenshi being Nenshi': PokemonGo fan

Helen Pike Metro | Calgary

A group of Calgarians caught the most rare Pokémon of all: a wild Naheed Nenshi, mayor of Calgary.

The crowd of Calgarians were hunting for a rare dragonite near Olympic Plaza when the mayor, also in search of the rare Pokémon, stopped by to play.

"Out of nowhere this pretty rare Pokémon pops up, so catch that thing," said Cedrick Foley. "Of course a whole bunch of cars start popping up, a crowd of people start popping up ... they're heaving because they've been chasing this Pokémon."

The cellphone game brings Pokémon characters to life on Android and iPhone screens, in a digital geocaching sense. Players become "trainers" who prowl actual city streets for wild Pokémon to capture and train.

Foley had left work early from Rodney's Oyster House where there's also a Pokestop and headed towards some lures when he turned around and suddenly Nenshi was right there with the crowd. The mayor missed the rare catch.

"I'm not surprised at all," Foley remarked on seeing the mayor participating in the Pokémon Go craze. "It's just Nenshi being Nenshi, which an aerodactyl is nice."

His worship hopped on board the Pokémon Go craze during Calgary's Folk and Music Festival Friday where he helped Coun. Druh Farrell with a quick crash course and undoubtedly caught many drowzees and zubats.

Foley said he spoke with Nenshi about strategies, and helped him transfer some Pokémon to the professor (the mayor had caught 250 creatures). Then, as the mayor left appeared, another rare catch for Foley, who is a Team Valour level 22 player.

But according to photos on Twitter, Nenshi was a tad behind the times. In Ottawa, Mayor and PokémonGo trainer Jim Watson was photographed giving the game a go earlier in July. Nenshi caught up, and now sitting at level 11 has been accepted as a member of Team Instinct - although he would have preferred to be on Team Valour.

According to the mayor's office he's been enjoying walks with the app open to observe how it's been able to activate Calgary's public spaces (with imaginary Pokéstops).

PRINCE'S ISLAND PARK

Folk Fest, Pokémon Go collide

PokemonGO trainers trying to overtake Prince's Island Park didn't have a run of the Calgary Folk Music Festival grounds without a pass, but that didn't stop some persistent players from trying.

According to executive director Debbi Salmonsen, the festival made minor alterations to security due to an incident before the festival.

"There was an effort from a group of players to see if they could get to a gym on our fenced site," she said, noting security was easily able to tell the players to catch their Pokemon elsewhere.

"We added a few volunteer security folk to the backstage performer and staff-only area during the festival while it was going on, when we learned it was a desired Pokemon destination."

Despite upping security, Salmonsen noted there weren't any issues or incidents connected to the game during the festival. In fact, players who were attending shows were able to catch some creatures between sets — or beers.

"We were happy to have any free added enhancements that people enjoy as long as they follow the site and festival general rules," Salmonsen said. METRO

Most Albertans want to stay in Canada

Nearly 25 per cent of Albertans think the province should become an independent country, according to an Insights West poll.

The survey is conducted online and has a margin of error of plus or minus four percentage points, which is relatively high in polling.

The study found that 23 per cent of Albertans think the province would be better off as an independent country and is similar to the result of a poll conducted in 2014 asking the same question.

It is important to note that the proportion of Albertans who would choose independence did not vary over the past two years," said Mario Canseco, with Insights West.

"Even after the defeat of the federal Conservatives in Ottawa and the first New Democratic government in Edmonton, the notion of an independent Alberta has not become more attractive for residents."

The poll also asked about which political leader in Alberta, both present or in the past, was 'best.' More than 50 per cent of survey respondents said Ralph Klein. Eleven per cent chose Rachel Notley.

The enemy at the gate is the noise of traffic from Sarcee Trail.

Johnson's backyard backs on to Sarcee Trail. He said the city is offering him and his neighbours a wooden fence for privacy and to help cut down on noise, but claim the noise levels don't warrant a larger concrete wall.

He said the noise makes it difficult to relax or socialize in his backyard.

"When trucks drive by you have to basically have to put your conversation on hold," he said.

This is a one-time offer tied to upgrades to an existing interchange at Stoney Trail. The fence will go on homeowner's property and upkeep will fall to residents once it's built.

Jeff Baird, senior transportation engineer with the City of Calgary said they've done on-site sound tests as well as predictive modeling that takes into account projected traffic growth over 10 and 20 years.

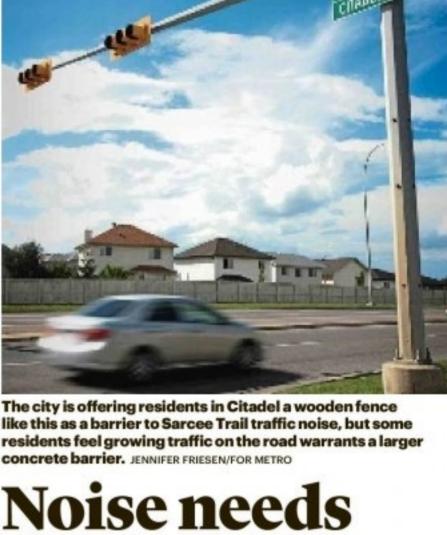

Neither sound tests nor predictive modeling have met the threshold needed for a concrete sound barrier.

MENTAL HEALTH

Calgarian on 10-month wait-list for therapy

Jeremy Simes For Metro | Calgary

Napane Penny says change has been incremental in improving access to provincial mental health resources, after receiving a referral letter telling her she must wait 10 to 12 months for a therapy program. On Monday, Penny, who said she's been a patient in the province's mental health system for about 20 years, said the letter prompted her to protest the long waits outside of a Calgary hospital.

"There just hasn't been any real, good changes," she said. "Come 12 months from now, and say the program is not a suit for me, then what? Am I going to have to wait another 10 months for something else? I think it's frustrating."

The 10 to 12 month wait

It's going to take Napane Penny 10 to 12 months to get into an AHS Dialectical Behaviour Therapy program. JENNIFER FRIESEN/FOR METRO time is for the Dialectical Behaviour Therapy (DBT) program, a specialized adult mental health program.

Janet Chafe, executive director of addiction and mental health in the Alberta Health Services (AHS) Calgary Zone, said the program is seeing a high demand with a 10-month wait list.

She said patients referred to the program and on the wait list are provided phone numbers for urgent or walk-in services required. That includes an emergency phone line, hospital services and two non-AHS services, which include the Calgary Counselling Centre and Wood's Homes Eastside Family Centre.

Chafe said the DBT program also went through an extensive quality improvement process in 2012-13, implementing a number of processes to improve efficiencies.

The wait list was reduced to four months, she added.

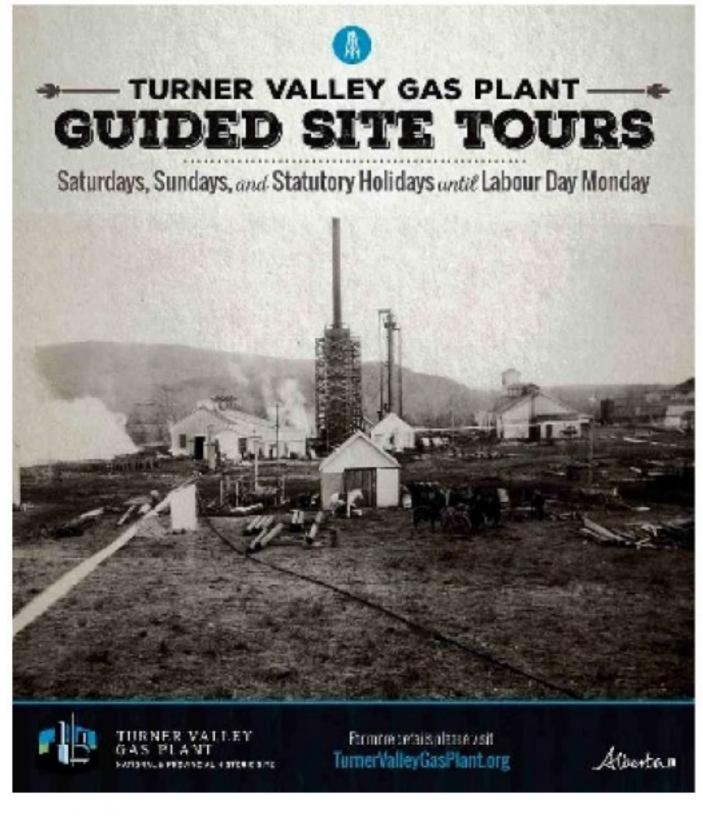

"AHS's Addiction and Mental Health leadership is very aware of this issue and have prioritized seeking ways to both improve access through reducing wait times and improve the transitional support for patients waiting for the service," she said.

But Penny said she thinks the changes just haven't been

"I think the biggest part is that it's time for action," she said.

"There's been so many promises that we're going to have more resources, more beds. You see something slowly coming in, but it's not keeping up with demand.

"That's not OK. We're in Canada and we have great health care, but there are still shortcomings that need to be addressed."

Health Canada assesses opioid compound

Jeremy Simes For Metro | Calgary

Health Canada says it'll continue assessing the classification of W-18, after a U.S. study suggested the substance isn't what the agency claims to be an opioid.

The study, published by researchers from the University of North Carolina Chapel Hill, found that W-18 didn't trigger all opioid receptors, meaning the substance isn't an opioid.

In response to the findings, Health Canada said it has referenced W-18 as a synthetic opioid based on "multiple credible sources" and the limited scientific information publicly available on W-18.

"However, doubts about this classification have been raised recently by a number of credible sources," Health Canada said in a statement.

"It has been noted that, at present, while the only publicly available scientific report compares W-18 and related compounds to opioids, it does not determine whether or not W-18 binds to opioid receptors in the body.

"The Department is aware of ongoing studies to determine the mode of action of W-18 and will continue to assess new information as it becomes available."

The study pleased University of Calgary researcher Stephanie Borgland, who specialized in pharmacology.

She said the information scared a lot of people, as officials claimed the substance was 100 times stronger than fentanyl.

The study also found that W-18 also had no "allosteric" activity when combined with an "endogenous" opioid, meaning W-18 is not going to change how morphine or heroin will affect someone, Borgland said.

However, the study found the drug could give you an arrhythmia, which is when your heart beats in an irregular way.

Being Canadian and being Muslim are not mutually exclusive.

That's coming from youth mentors Sadia Begum and Shabnum Hussain, who finished up with their class of kids at the summer Centre 4 Excellence program.

The program focuses on helping youth learn to balance their identities as a Muslim and as a Canadian which director Mohamed el-Rafih said is one of the most important factors in preventing the radicalization of Islamic youth.

Begum and Hussain are only 13, but they're already aware society tends to view them differently because of their faith.

"We're normal teenagers," said Hussain. "It's not that we're some alien life. We're the same. We want to show kids you don't have to pick a side. It's your life - balance it."

Begum explained that, yes, as part of their faith they pray through the day.

Their morning routine still involves brushing their teeth, showering and eating breakfast. The only difference is they have to wake up 30 seconds earlier and say their morning dua, or prayer.

That's the same viewpoint these teenagers are trying to teach the kids in their summer class.

"It's not like we take them into a room and teach them this is how to be Muslim, this is how to be Canadian," laughed Begum.

She explained it's about having fun, stopping for prayer, and learning you belong.

She said it's easy for people to do terrible things in the name of Islam, kids you don't have but that doesn't make them Muslim.

"It's them giving themselves a title.

It's like me saying, I'm a basketball player. Are you going to believe that?" asked Hussain.

The girls are proud of the work they've done over the summer, and like any teenager, are excited to spend the rest of the summer eating out and spending time with friends. El-Rafih's programs at centre4excellence. ca continues to mentor youth throughout the year.

Professor says shift in culture imperative to reduce harm

Jeremy Simes For Metro | Calgary

A change in sporting culture, tackling techniques and more education may be key drivers to reduce Alberta's high concussion rate among people admitted for sports-related brain injuries, according to an expert specializing in athletic therapy.

On Tuesday, the Canadian Institute for Health Information released a new report that showed 93 per cent of all sportsrelated brain injuries in Alberta were concussions in 2014-15, a three percentage point jump from 90 per cent in 2010-11.

Dennis Valdez, an assistant professor in athletic therapy at Mount Royal University, said the culture of sports, like hockey or football, has much to do with high rates, as players don't want to appear weak when getting hit.

He said players shake it off when they're wobbling or seeing stars, even though they should probably be treated immediately.

"Mismanaging (the brain) is catastrophic," Valdez said. "Why is it so high? Culture of the sport is the simplest answer. Kids want to push through it. They want to show that they're tough."

The largest number of concussion cases was found in hockey, with 741 brain injuries reported. Within that caseload, the majority were found in kids ages 10 to 14 with 322 injury cases.

Kevin Cobelka, executive director of Hockey Calgary, said the organization has upped education for coaches so they can identify concussions, adding checking won't be allowed for lower Midget divisions.

But he said players giving answers on how they feel after being hit isn't always easy.

"Sometimes you don't get all the answers from a 10-year-old," Cobelka said. "It's not like a cut where you can see it."

Football and rugby players saw 364 brain-injury cases in 2014-15, with 206 caseloads among kids ages 15-17.

Valdez suggested players, especially in football, should reconsider how they tackle. He said checking with your shoulders is better than helmetto-helmet.

"Practising tackling drills without a helmet mitigates players from using their helmet as a weapon."

Valdez said the culture of the sport also applies to the mentality of coaches.

"Just go down to Shouldice during high-school football season," he said. "If you just listen to the conversations coaches have with players after hard hits, some of the coaching staff will tell them that it's fine when it appears to be a concussion."

Teens found dead were shot: Mounties

NORTHERN ALBERTA

Killings 'not a random act,' ruled a double homicide

Two teens found dead earlier this week in northern Alberta were shot to death and the case is now considered a double homicide, Mounties said

RCMP Insp. Gibson Glavin said an autopsy on the bodies of Dylan Laboucan and Cory Grey revealed they died by gunshots.

"It is not a random act," Glavin told reporters at K Division headquarters in Edmonton.

"These two victims, Cory and Dylan, were deliberately killed by someone or some people, and they were connected to them in some way.

"We do know how they might be connected," he added.

"But right now we're not able to release that information. It's a key element of the investigation."

Laboucan, who was 17, was found Monday night on the Whitefish Lake First Nation.

The body of his girlfriend, 19-year-old Grey, was found the following day in a rural area outside of High Prairie, northwest of Edmonton.

Glavin said the bodies were found "some distance" from each other, but declined to be more specific.

He also declined to answer questions on the nature of the gunshot injuries, the weapons used, or the disposition of the bodies, saying that revealing such details could compromise the investigation.

"That kind of information is known by a select few right now — the RCMP, the medical examiner and whoever did this,"

"People who are way off in the information that we know to be correct are clearly people that we don't have to (give) immediate attention to."

Family members have said that the victims lived together in a trailer.

They have also said that on Saturday, a man found Dylan unresponsive outside the trailer. The man then went to phone for help and when he returned to the trailer, the body was gone. Glavin said that man is be-

Alberta is making $20 million in grants available to provincial small brewers to offset a markup hike. THE CANADIAN PRESS FILE

Province announces grants for brewers

Alberta's small beer brewers will get up to $20 million a year in grants, helping to offset a looming hike in the markup on all beer sold in the province.

Finance Minister Joe Ceci said Thursday the goal is to level the industry playing field, help grow Alberta's industry and create jobs.

"Alberta's craft brewing industry is an important part of a more diversified, more resilient economy for all Albertans," Ceci told reporters at a news conference at a local craft brewer.

"With 37 craft brewers and counting, our government knows that we all benefit with great local products."

Under the program, brew-ers who produce less than 30 million litres per year will get money on a sliding scale based on their sales.

Ceci said the most any brewer can make under the plan is $12 million.

The program is beginning immediately and application forms are already available, he said.

The change will come after the markup on beer is raised to $1.25 a litre on Aug. 5 for all beer sold in Alberta, regardless of where it is made.

Previously, Alberta brewers paid less on the markup, with a sliding scale starting at as low as 10 cents a litre. Brewers in Saskatchewan and B.C. got the same deal under the free trade New West Partnership Agreement.

Ceci announced the hike on July 12, promising at that time a grant program to assist provincial brewers.

Saskatchewan complained about the change, saying it violates the spirit of the New West Partnership free trade deal. It has threatened to impose retaliatory measures.

However, Alberta Premier Rachel Notley has said the brewery rules are already rife with exemptions and unfair provisions, adding she will do whatever is necessary to grow the industry in Alberta.

Alberta has the most open beer market in Canada, with sellers simply having to fill out a form to sell. Access to shelves in other provinces is controlled by liquor boards.

Terry Rock, head of the Alberta Small Brewers Association, said changes remove impediments to industry growth.

"We think with today's announcement we're going to catch up and we're going to accelerate," said Rock.

Rock said a craft beer operation creates seven to 10 times more jobs compared with a macro-beer producer. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Nien-Zi Chang hopes to learn from Canada's improv Mecca

Aaron Chatha Metro | Calgary

In his first few weeks in Calgary, Nien-Zu Chang's courage levels have evolved from kitten to lion.

The Taiwanese improv performer flew to Canada with the goal of taking classes at the famed Loose Moose theatre in Calgary — it's kind of a Mecca for improvisers, as founder Keith Johnstone played a huge part in crafting modern theatre sports.

People like Chang often travel down to try a class and take part in shows.

"I spent all my savings and came to Calgary to learn the roots of improv - something which is pure and directly from Keith himself," said Chang.

But when you're on stage performing in a format that requires quick thinking, Chang found himself often on the sidelines - lacking confidence in himself and in his ability to speak English.

Chang actually only just discovered improv in Taiwan. He studied theatre, but found he was too hard on himself to enjoy it.

So he quit theatre and taught tap-dancing for a few years. One day, a student of his invited him to an improv show - and he fell in love with the format.

"I was a very serious person," he said. "I learned to be more soft, and brought joy to myself - and now I want to share that joy with other people."

Chang said improvisers in Calgary are the most generous he's ever worked with - within two weeks, he found his voice onstage, and has even been invited to guest star in Jamie Northan's popular Kill Hard show.

"This is a gift from the sky," Chang joked, adding that in Taiwan, Hollywood action movies are very popular. Kill Hard is a show that spoofs action movie Chang is hoping to bring a bit of his own culture to the stage.

"I want to play a Taiwanese gangster, speaking Mandarin," he laughed. "The gangsters in Taiwan always chew something like tobacco, it's called bin-lang, and there's juice that comes out and you have to spit all the time."

He said while he mostly avoids those people in real life, he's excited to become one.

Kill Hard returns to Loose Moose on July 29 and 30, but Chang will only guest star on the first show. For more information, visit www.loosemoose.com.

Calgary Fringe starts July 29, and one of the most maddening shows this year involves an escaped psychi-atric patient who believes he's the reincarnation of an Egyptian Pharaoh. His main nemesis is a six-yearold with a mouth like a sandblaster. Written by Rob Gee, Icarus plays at Lolita's Lounge. Visit calgaryfringe. ca for more.

Tell me about the process of creating Simon, the main character.

I first came up with the central character many years when I used to play "a manic patient" for medical students' exams. He was a great vehicle for educating the students. For example, one symptom of manic psychosis (which this character has) is that people will often formulate conspiracy theories; so while in role I'd bang on about how psychiatrists were bribed to prescribe certain drugs by pharmaceutical companies. In the feedback, the students would often identify that as a conspiracy theory; at which point the examiner would be obliged to tell them that it was actually

In creating Simon and portraying him realistically, I received a lot of advice and feedback from several ex-patients. Whilst I already know all the clinical stuff, I wanted him to be more than just the personification of an illness. I wanted him to be a credible and likeable human being who happens to have a psychiatric condition.

How does your past history in psychiatry inform your writing?

I've written three shows about mental health, of which Icarus is the second. If there is a message going through all that material it's this: that psychiatric illness isn't something that happens to other people. It can happen to any of us at any time, so it doesn't make sense to view it as something out of the ordinary.

How would you describe your sense of humour, in regards to the show?

There's lots of one liners and jokes of various levels of taste! I'm an entertainer first and foremost, so the priority is that people come to the show and have a good time. I get a lot of reviews saying I've managed to tread a careful line between laughter and respect, but there's nothing careful about it! I think as long as your jokes come from a place of compassion, you can't miss. Laughter is also a great way of pushing peoples' buttons and making them think. If I can create a show that folks are pondering the next day, my work is done.

Program director Jeff Murray said it was amazing that Downie. after finding out about his diagnosis, would choose to give one last goodbye to his fans.

"We kind of thought, what could we do to say thank you to them? That's where the idea came from," he explained.

Hip Radio will be divided into three segments. The first segment, hosted by Zed announcers Lock and Tony, will take listeners on a trip through Canada, as so many of the Hip's songs make reference to Canadian landmarks and history.

The second segment is more of a trip through time, going through the biggest hits from all their albums, from their early days right through to the most recent release, Man Machine Poem.

"The last segment is their live album in its entirety," said Murray. "Because tickets were so hard to come by, it's like, well, here's the next best thing."

The station is live at hipradio.ca until Wednesday, when the Hip play their final show in Calgary.

MAN MACHINE POSTS LAST HURRAH

- In May, lead singer of the Tragically Hip, Gord Downie, revealed in a letter to his fans that he had been diagnosed with brain cancer. The band planned one final tour to say goodbye to fans and - as expected - pre-sale tickets sold out within minutes.
- Following an outpouring of fan support, the Hip did what they could to help fans get in the stadium.
- "Due to an overwhelming demand for the Man

Machine Poem Tour, we have adjusted the show design in each venue to accommodate more seating," the band said on its Facebook page.

The Hip also added a second show for many cities, including Calgary. As expected, pre-sale tickets sold out just as quickly as the first batch, but, as of July 28 there are a limited number of seats still available for the second show. AARON CHATHA/METRO

Fort Mac gets $87.5 million to rebuild

The Alberta government has announced it will start sending money to Fort McMurray to help the municipality cover some of its costs from the devastating wildfire in May.

The province says it will provide an advance of $87.5 million to the Regional Municipality of Wood Buffalo to help with uninsurable expenses.

Those include emergency response, evacuation, cleanup of damaged areas and public spaces and repairs to public infrastructure damaged by the wildfire.

The advance will cover about half of those costs. The municipality estimates the total tab for its response to be about $175 million.

Last month, the federal government cut Alberta an initial cheque for about $300 million to help pay for firefighting and support to evacuees following the wildfire.

The fire displaced about 90,000 people in the region and destroyed about 2,400 homes and other buildings.

"The Alberta government has been with us every step of the way during what is the biggest challenge in our region's history and we look forward to continued support that is much needed for our residents," Melissa Blake, mayor of the Regional Municipality of Wood Buffalo, said in a release.

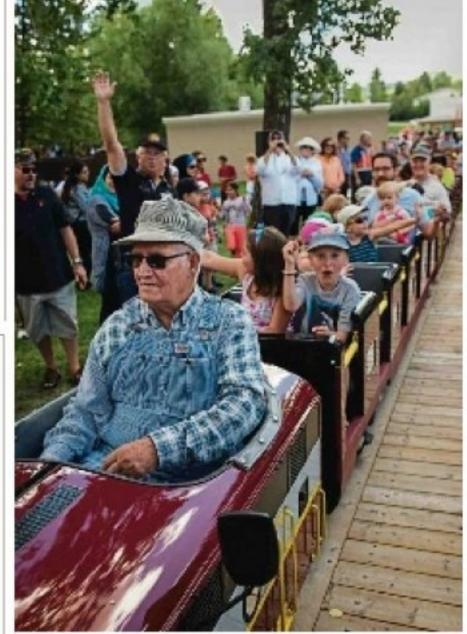

Alberta has said that the cost of fighting the blaze and fixing the damage will run into the billions of dollars.

A state of local emergency is still in effect in the municipality.

Municipal Affairs Minister Danielle Larivee said the provincial government promised to help Fort McMurray as it recovers and rebuilds.

"This advance on disaster recovery funds is part of that promise and will ensure the municipality can keep moving forward to clean up and rebuild, without having to carry a heavy financial burden," Larivee said.

For a miniature train, restoring it was a massive project.

The mini-train at Bowness Park lived on for almost 60 years before the 2013 flood took it out of commission. And when Allan Millard was first asked to restore the iconic ride. he was reluctant.

But after being talked into it, Millard took on the project with a group of restoration experts. They took it apart to salvage every piece possible and rebuild what was left.

Efforts fail to reach Canadians

Arrested men's status as dual citizens makes matter messy

Government efforts to reach two Turkish-Canadians arrested in connection with a failed coup in Turkey earlier this month have so far been stymied.

Davud Hanci and Ilhan Erdem were arrested and detained separately over the past week as Turkish authorities swept up thousands of people it accuses of having supported the July 15 coup attempt, which left more than 200 people dead.

Citing privacy laws, Global Affairs Canada would only say that Canadian officials in Turkey are in contact with local authorities and providing consular assistance to the men's families. A government source, however, confirmed diplomats have not been able to reach Hanci or Erdem.

Both men are dual nationals, meaning they hold both Turkish and Canadian citizenship. Hanci lives in Calgary and is an imam for both the federal and Alberta correctional services. Erdem lived in Toronto and Ottawa, where he was also an imam, before moving back to Turkey after getting his Canadian citizenship.

Consular officials often have difficulty helping Canadians with dual citizenship who are arrested in their native country. This is particularly true of countries in the Middle East such as Iran, which does not recognize dual citizenships.

Turkey does recognize dual nationalities. However, the U.S. State Department says the Turkish government does not permit Turks with two nationalities and who are arrested in Turkey to contact officials from the other country for help.

"International law on this is non-existent," said Gar Pardy, who served for years as the federal government's head of consular affairs. "All you can do is just keep pushing."

Erdem was arrested at the Ataturk Airport in Istanbul on Monday while preparing to board a flight to Canada with his wife and two children, according to friend Nurcan Topcuoglu. Turkish media say Erdem is accused of leading the Hizmet movement in Canada.

The Hizmet movement, also known as the Gulen movement, is described as a global network based on the teachings of U.S.-based cleric Fethullah Gulen, the U.S.-based cleric that the Turkish government accuses of masterminding the COUD. THE CANADIAN PRESS

PAY PROBLEMS

Feds admit they could have done better

The federal government could have done a better job implementing the new payroll system that's causing serious payday headaches for tens of thousands of civil servants, a senior bureaucrat admitted to a Commons committee Thursday.

But moving from the antiquated, paper-heavy pay system the government used for four decades to the electronic Phoenix system was the right call at the right time, said deputy public-services minister Marie Lemay.

"I think we could have done additional measures (to smooth the transition process)," Lemay told the House of Commons committee that oversees government operations.

"But the move to the second wave and the move to Phoenix is the right decision."

MPs on the committee grilled Lemay and other officials with questions, including one civil servants and their unions have been asking for months: why was Phoenix rolled out when it was clear it had significant shortcomings?

There were indications of "bugs" in the Phoenix system after it was first launched on a limited basis in February following several delays and a third-party assessment, she said.

But the issues were minor, said Lemay, who took on a new role as deputy minister just as Phoenix was being fully implemented in a much larger second wave. And she would have recommended the system be given the green light at that time, she told the committee.

Estimated amount that dealing with the debacle could cost

Still, knowing what she knows now, that second phase should have included more time for employees to be trained on the system, and the government should have retained many of the pay system employees that were let go as the new system came online, she said.

Earlier Thursday, federal officials said they expect to have resolved all of the pay delays created by the problematic new pay system by the end of October - but undoing the damage won't be cheap.

Dealing with the monthslong debacle, which has caused serious payday headaches for tens of thousands of civil servants, will cost an estimated $15 to $20 million, Lemay told a news conference earlier in the day.

That doesn't include upgrades that will be required to ensure the system runs more smoothly in the future, she added. "There's another portion that we're looking at doing to enhance, and that I still don't have a cost to."

Some 1,100 of the more than 80,000 problem files identified last week have been closed, Lemay said. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Hillary rocks Philadelphia

U.S. ELECTION

Clinton goes full bore on Donald Trump in big speech

Promising Americans a steady hand, Hillary Clinton cast herself Thursday night as a unifier for divided times, steeled for the challenges of a volatile world by decades in politics that have left some Americans skeptical that she understands their lives.

"I know that at a time when so much seems to be pulling us apart, it can be hard to imagine how we'll ever pull together again," Clinton said as she accepted the Democratic nomination, becoming the first woman to lead a major U.S. political party. "But I'm here to tell you tonight - progress is possible."

Clinton took the stage to roaring applause from flagwaving delegates. But her real audience was the millions of voters who may welcome her experience but question her character.

Clinton acknowledged those concerns briefly, saying "I get it that some people just don't know what to make of me." But her primary focus was portraying herself as the only qualified candidate in a general election contest against Republican Donald Trump.

"Imagine him in the Oval Office facing a real crisis," she said. "A man you can bait with a tweet is not a man we can trust with nuclear weapons."

Clinton's four-day convention began with efforts to shore up liberals who backed Bernie Sanders in the Democratic primary and it ended with an outstretched hand to Republicans and independents unnerved by Trump. A parade of military leaders, law enforcement officials and Republicans took the stage ahead of Clinton to endorse her in the general election contest with Trump.

"This is the moment, this is the opportunity for our future," said retired Marine Gen. John R. Allen, a former commander in Afghanistan. "We must seize this moment to elect Hillary Clinton as president of the United States of America."

American flags waved in the stands of the packed convention hall and the crowd broke into chants of "U-S-A!" drowning out scattered calls of "No more war."

The Democratic nomination now officially hers, Clinton has just over three months to persuade Americans Trump is unqualified for the Oval Office and overcome the visceral connection he has with some voters in a way the Democratic nominee does not.

Campaigning in Iowa Thursday, Trump said there were "a lot of lies being told" at Clinton's convention. In an earlier statement, he accused Democrats of living in a "fantasy world," ignoring economic and security troubles as well as Clinton's controversial email use at the State Department.

The FBI's investigation into Clinton's use of a private internet server didn't result in criminal charges, but it did appear to deepen voters' concerns with her honesty and trustworthiness. A separate pre-convention controversy over hacked Democratic Party emails showing favouritism for Clinton in the primary threatens to deepen the perception that Clinton prefers to play by her own rules.

Through four nights of polished convention pageantry, Democratic heavyweights told a different story about Clinton.

The most powerful validation came Wednesday night from President Barack Obama, her victorious primary rival in 2008. Obama declared Clinton not only can defeat Trump's "deeply pessimistic vision" but also realize the "promise of this great nation."

Seeking to offset possible weariness with a politician who has been in the spotlight for decades, he said of Clinton: "She's been there for us, even if we haven't always noticed."

Clinton was introduced by her daughter, Chelsea, who spoke warmly of her mother as a woman "driven by compassion, by faith, by kindness, a fierce sense of justice, and a heart full of love."

A studious wonk who prefers policy discussions to soaring oratory, Clinton has acknowledged she struggles with the flourishes that seem to come naturally to Obama and her husband. She leaned heavily on her "stronger together" campaign theme, invoking her 1996 book "It Takes a Village."

Indeed, the Democratic convention has been a visual ode those mantras: The first African-American president symbolically seeking to hand the weightiest baton in the free world to a woman. A parade of speakers — gay and straight, young and old, white, black and Hispanic — cast Trump as out-of-touch with a diverse and fast-changing nation.

Khizr Khan, an American Muslim whose son was killed in military service, emotionally implored voters to stop Trump, who has called for a temporary ban on Muslim immigration.

"Donald Trump, you are asking Americans to trust you with their future," Khan said. "Let me ask you, have you even read the United States Constitution? I will gladly lend you my copy." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ties with al-Qaida cut: Nusra Front

The leader of Syria's Nusra Front said in a recording aired Thursday that his group is changing its name, claiming it will have no more ties with al-Qaida in an attempt to undermine a potential U.S. and Russian air campaign against its fighters.

The announcement is the first time that an entire branch of al-Qaida has said it is leaving the terror network. But the move took place with the endorsement of al-Qaida's central leadership, and its ideology remains the same, raising questions whether the change really goes beyond the new name, the Levant Conquest Front.

The United States, which considers Nusra a terrorist organization, immediately expressed its skepticism. White House spokesman Josh Earnest said Thursday the U.S. continues to assess that Nusra leaders intend to attack the West and said the U.S.-led military campaign is focused on a number of extremist groups, including Nusra and the Islamic State group.

But the step could complicate U.S. efforts in Syria.

Without the al-Qaida name, the group will now seek to expand its alliances with other Syrian rebels, including relative moderates backed by Washington and its allies. Those factions may then oppose international airstrikes against Nusra fighters, arguing that they are now simply fellow rebels against President Bashar Assad, not an al-Oaida affiliate. # Russia, Syria offer ways out

But residents skeptical of leaving besieged city

After months of fighting to encircle its opponents in Aleppo, Syrian authorities backed by Russia on Thursday offered safe corridors out for residents and rebels in the northern city's besieged quarters, underlining the government's determination to seal off the metropolis and force an eventual surrender by the opposition.

Many residents dismissed the offer, saying it presents them with an impossible choice between a slow death if they stay behind and possible detention if they attempt to leave.

The encirclement of rebelheld eastern Aleppo sets the stage for a drawn-out siege with potentially huge implications for the future of the armed opposition to President Bashar Assad. The military continued to consolidate its grip Thursday, seizing a district on the northern edge of the city.

"If Assad shows that he is winning Aleppo, and he's now also advancing on the rebels in Damascus, it could trigger a more dramatic shift by finally convincing opposition groups that they have lost the war," said Aron Lund, nonresident associate of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace.

The announcement on humanitarian corridors was made by Russian Defence Minister Sergei Shoigu, and was followed by a general amnesty offer by Syria's President Bashar Assad for rebels who give up their weapons and surrender to authorities over the next three months.

Rebels and residents of Aleppo said they were deeply skeptical of the offer, and there was no sign of people massing to leave the besieged parts of the city.

"I will not leave. I will be the last man in the city," said Mohammed Zein Khandakani, a 28-year-old resident of the Maadi neighbourhood of Aleppo who volunteers with the city's medical council. "I can't imagine ever seeing a member of this regime one more time."

But Khandakani, formerly a lawyer who was detained for a month in the early days of the protests against the Syrian government, said he was worried about his family.

Fliers dropped over eastern Aleppo showed supposed corridors leading to government areas, but the media office for the opposition's civil defence search and rescue group in east Aleppo said no safe corridors have been opened.

Pipeline spills bad publicity: Company

CEO says safety has improved in recent years

The oil spill in Saskatchewan could increase public skepticism of pipeline projects, says the CEO of TransCanada, the company behind the proposed Energy East Pipeline.

"All of these incidents shake public confidence," Russ Girling said in an interview. "There's no question that things like that cause people concern, and rightfully so."

Last week, a Husky Energy pipeline spilled between 200,000 and 250,000 litres of oil into the North Saskatchewan River, leaving cities along the waterway scrambling to find non-tainted sources of drinking water.

Girling said TransCanada will be keen to learn from the Husky incident to improve pipeline safety.

"From all incidents, both ours and other incidents around our industry, we learn from them - certainly around moving water, that is one of our biggest risks," said Girling.

He said the company has implemented numerous safety improvements in recent years around waterways, including thicker pipelines at crossings, drilling pipes under rivers at times, and adding extra valves at crossings so that it can shut off a pipeline faster.

The Husky spill comes as public hearings are set to begin on Energy East on Aug. 8 in Saint John.

The project has faced significant opposition from en-

The proposed $15.7 billion pipeline would move 1.1 million barrels of oil a day from Alberta and Saskatchewan through Quebec and into New Brunswick to supply Eastern Canada refineries and for overseas shipping.

The development would lead to an estimated 281 tankers a year heading to the proposed Energy East terminal near Saint John, an increase of upwards of 300 per cent to the number of tankers now in the Bay of Fundy, according to the NRDC campaign.

Girling dismissed the campaign, saying it is concerned only with keeping oilsands crude in the ground rather than what's necessarily best for the environment or safety.

'There's no compromise in these folks," he said. "There's no logic, no rhyme or reason, rationale, science, to what they put forward."

TransCanada continues to push ahead with Energy East, but it also has a wide range of other major initiatives underway, including expansion in Mexico and consolidating its recent $13 billion US acquisition of the Columbia Pipeline Group. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Canada's broadcast and telecommunications regulator is asking for the public's input as it launches a review of its wireless code of conduct.

THE ONE DOWNSIDE OF SUMMER

Brain freeze. Also known as ice cream headache. Also known as sphenopalatine ganglioneuralgia — or the holyheck-that-hurts nerve pain you get from slurping cold or frozen treats too fast. What's really going on in your head?

Can the weather really give me a headache?

I had a horrible migraine during a thunderstorm. Is it true weather change can trigger a headache? - Don, Edmonton Migraine sufferers sure believe that. On surveys, up to 70 per cent say their headaches are affected by weather changes.

Research suggests there's something to that, but there's reason for skepticism, A 2010 textbook on clinical neurology cautions: "Taken together, virtually all aspects of life have been suspected to trigger migraines

... but scientific evidence for many of these triggers is poor." Studies that compare headache patterns with actual meteorological data, instead of just self-reports, produced mixed results. Several found no relationship between weather changes and headaches.

A few, however, have been more convincing, A 2015 Japanese study compared migraine suffers with people with common tension headaches during the time a cyclone (a significant change in atmospheric pressure) swept in. More than 70 per cent of migraine patients, but only 21 per cent of others, reported migraine attacks.

A study of 7,054 migraine patients visiting a Boston emergency room between 2000 and 2007 found a temperature increase of 5 C in the 24 hours before the ER visit increased risk of migraine by 7.5 per cent. Though the evidence isn't as robust as it could be, I'm more inclined to believe in weather

over other proposed migraine triggers (like wifi and magnetic fields), because there's a plausible mechanism behind it.

It's believed when air pressure increases or decreases during weather changes, blood vessels in the brain compress or expand. This irritates nearby nerves, causing throbbing pain and symptoms like nausea and sensitivity to light. Ouch. That's all too believable to people who suffer from migraines.

Damon says he owes a great deal to the fictional character.

After the early success of Good Will Hunting, Saving Private Ryan and The Talented Mr. Ripley made him a star, a string of flops cooled his box office appeal.

"Right before The Bourne Identity came out," he said, "I hadn't been offered a movie in a year."

movie barely earned back its production costs at the box office.

Ninety per cent of director Steven Soderbergh's job on The Informant! was casting this mostly true tale of a highly paid executive-turnedwhistleblower who helped uncover a price fixing policy that landed several executives (including himself) in jail.

It's a tricky balancing act to find an actor who can keep the audience on-board through a tale of corporate malfeasance and personal greed, who can be likeable but is actually a liar and a thief, but Damon is the guy.

The Informant! skewed a tad too far into art house territory to be Soderbergh's new Erin Brockovich-sized hit, but Damon's presence kept the story of accounting, paperwork and avarice interesting. Reviews were kind but A Serious Man and The Twilight Saga: New Moon buried the film on its opening weekend.

Damon teamed with John Krasinski to produce and cowrite Promised Land, a David and Goliath story that relied on the charm and likability of its cast to sell the idea that fracking is bad and the corporations who dupe cashstrapped farmers into leasing their land are evil.

It's hard to make talk of water table pollution dramatic but Promised Land makes an attempt by giving much of the heavy lifting to Damon.

Done in by middling reviews and "sobering" box office receipts, this earnest and well-meaning movie might have been better served in documentary form.

With an Oscar on his shelf and more than 70 films on his resume Damon is philosophical about the kinds of films he chooses to make, big or small.

"If people go to those movies, then yes, that's true, bigtime success," he says.

"If not, it's much ado about nothing."

WORST MOTHERS IN CINEMATIC HISTORY

Bad mothers may be getting their very own summer comedy but malfunctioning mommas have been part of cinema lore for ages. With the release of Bad Moms this weekend, Metro looks at what lessons we could learn from the worst matriarchs in movie history.

Norma Bates: Psycho

Norman Bates's mom literally drove him nuts. In the 1960 horror classic, the innkeeper became so obsessed with his mother's repressive smothering that he murdered her in a jealous rage after she found a lover. Oh, and then he kept the corpse in the cellar and began dressing up as mama to target other women.

Lesson learned: Give your kid some breathing room.

Mary: Precious

Mo'Nique won an Oscar in 2009 for her terrifying portrayal of a monster matriarch. All poor pregnant teen Precious wants is to get out of the ghetto but when an opportunity arises, her perpetually angry, welfare-sucking mama sidetracks the abused adolescent.

Lesson learned: Don't blame your children for your own miserable problems.

The Queen: Snow White

She wanted to be the "fairest one of all" but the only thing The Queen in Snow White ever deserved was the "worst stepmother in all of cinema history." Wickedly vain, The Queen grew so jealous of her innocent stepdaughter's beauty, she kicked the girl out of the house, put a hit on her and passed her a poisoned apple. Jeez, get over yourself, already.

Lesson learned: Stop staring in the mirror. Your kids are beautiful too.

Kevin's mom: Home Alone

In this 1990 comedy, Catherine O'Hara's negligent mother forgot to pack preteen Kevin (Macaulay Culkin) when she goes on vacation, leaving him home alone to combat burglars. In the following sequel, she left poor Kevin abandoned on the streets of Manhattan. Child services would not approve.

Lesson learned: Don't forget your child exists.

Joan Crawford: Mommie Dearest

Based on an adopted daughter's memoir, this 1981 portrayal of Joan Crawford shows the screen-legend as a sadistic, abusive alcoholic who put her ego above her kids. Joan not only screams at her children, she whacks them with coat hangers and chokes her daughter when she admits she's "not one of her fans."

Lesson learned: Don't mix motherhood and showbiz.

'Jason Bourne is a violent character'

Matt Damon is running a tight ship to promote Jason Bourne — a film that nine years ago both he and director Paul Greengrass thought would never happen. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

INTERVIEW

Actor says he understands objections to horrific scenes

It's a sweltering afternoon in Hollywood and Matt Damon has just gotten out of couple's therapy.

Don't worry, it was just with Jimmy Kimmel — a continuation of the fake feud that started over 10 years ago before the two had even met.

"It takes a really surreal turn because we got a real therapist and we play it totally straight," said Damon seated in the green room of Kimmel Studios. After "therapy," Damon had about 10 minutes to do a photo shoot, film an intro for a festival he can't attend and scarf down a salad. This is life on the blockbuster circuit.

Damon, 45, is promoting Jason Bourne, a film that nine years ago both he and director Paul Greengrass thought would never happen. After three movies exploring the story of the super spy created by Robert Ludlum, the last two of which were directed by Greengrass, and a particularly difficult shooting experience with The Bourne Ultimatum, Damon was done.

The name would come up often, though, in meetings and from fans. In 2009, around the time Damon and Greengrass did Green Zone, they flirted with getting another one going but there just wasn't a story. Universal Pictures, meanwhile, moved on, expanding the Bourne universe with a film focused on another agent played by Jeremy Renner. It did well enough, and a sequel was in the works. Then, in 2014, Greengrass and Damon took a look at the world and realized how much had changed.

"Paul called and said that the first set piece would be an austerity riot in Athens," Damon said. "I'm like, 'OK, we're back."

But they made sure to structure their production schedule so they weren't coming up with the script while they were shooting - as was the case with Ultimatum.

"When you're in production, you're lighting money on fire and you can feel it. What (co-writers) Paul (Greengrass) and Chris (Rouse) did this time, which is great, was they took a whole year and showed up with 120 pages that you want to shoot," Damon said. "We knew once we said we were going to do it, that we were going to get a release date, so we just got all of our ducks in a row."

And it worked. For Ultimatum, they shot for 138 days. Jason Bourne was a trim 95.

The film, out Friday, is partially about the world of government surveillance, introducing CIA agents played by Tommy Lee Jones and Alicia Vikander. The high octane hunt takes Bourne to the requisite international locales and even a few domestic ones - including Las Vegas, where one set piece features a SWAT vehicle plowing through cars on the strip. It's eerily reminiscent of the recent incident in France.

The marketing team pulled the scene from European ads immediately, he said.

"That was just horrific," Damon said. "None of us felt like it was a copy-cat thing, but we didn't want to be insensitive with those images out there."

It makes him think of the objections to the posters showing him wielding a gun — a sentiment he keenly understands.

"Movies are a tool for empathy. I wouldn't do them if I didn't believe that," he said. "But violence is a part of the human condition and so sometimes you end up playing violent characters. Jason Bourne is a violent character."

He hopes that the series, which has shown Bourne atoning for his actions, has a mindfulness that distinguishes it from others.

INDIGNATION

Former child star changes course

Logan Lerman is already one of the most sought-after young actors in Hollywood. You might then expect the 24-year-old to have a steady lineup of dystopian young-adult adaptations or house-party comedies in the pipeline. But his latest is in a different direction entirely: industry veteran James Schamus' Philip Roth adaptation, Indignation.

The role, Lerman says, is exactly the kind of material he's attracted to, and he doesn't mind turning down more cookie-cutter (and lucrative) parts in order to find his own path.

"Let the other actors take the bad roles," he joked in a recent interview, only using a different word for "bad."

"I'm trying to figure out who I am through the choices I make. I don't know myself well enough. I'm still trying to figure out what person I want to be."

In Indignation, Lerman stars as Marcus Messner, the only son of a Jewish butcher in Newark, New Jersey. While the Korean War is raging, he goes to a Christian college in Ohio, where his rigid principles are challenged by a forward but fragile young woman (Sarah Gadon) and a rigid and judgmental dean (Tracy Letts).

The directorial debut of Schamus (the longtime writing and producing partner of Ang Lee and the former head of Focus Features), Indignation is a revelation of the maturing talent of Lerman. His performance is subtle and smart, but also with the kind of confident charisma that can make stars out of young actors.

Lerman is also, for the first time, a producer of the film.

He calls it a "glorified credit" but acknowledges a deeper involvement in the process is important to him.

"That's the only way I work now," says Lerman, who's also producing one of his next films, Sidney Hall, a drama about a young novelist overwhelmed by sensation success. "I just want to find films that I like and help them get into production and do whatever I can to make it happen."

Viggo talks the Habs and the have-nots

Canadiens fan and actor stars in film about life off the grid

Viggo Mortensen is famously an Oscar-nominated actor and a major Habs fan.

The star of the moving new drama Captain Fantastic, which is getting rave reviews for its portrayal of a family living in isolation off the grid, has donned Montreal Canadiens garb at press conferences and on film sets, including for The Lord of the Rings and A History of Violence.

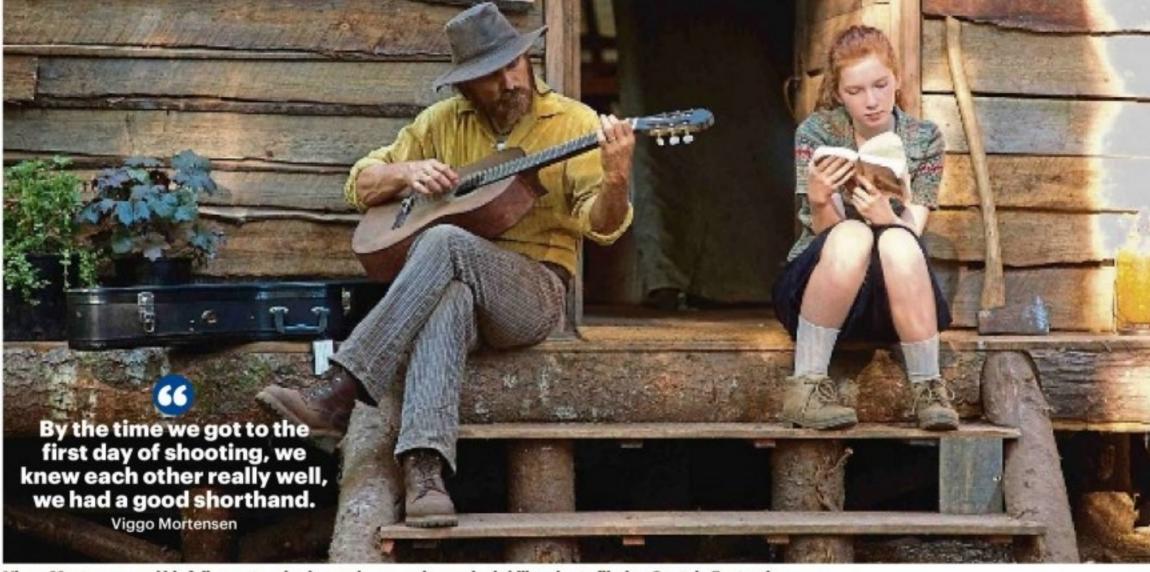

Naturally, during a recent phone interview about Captain Fantastic (now in theatres), the topic shifted to the team's recent trade of star player P.K. Subban.

"I'm sick about it, I'm sad about it," said the New York native, who got a best actor Oscar nomination for the David Cronenberg-directed Eastern Promises.

"But it's a team sport, it's not just one guy that makes your team good or bad. So I'm optimistic that maybe it will be good in some way, for the collective.... There are still a lot of strong individuals on the team and some veterans who lead by example. So I don't think it will be as bad as a lot of Canadiens' fans are fearing."

Mortensen even brought a bit of Quebec to the set of Captain Fantastic, written and directed by Matt Ross.

Mortensen plays a father raising his six children in the forests of the Pacific Northwest, isolated from society with no cellphones or tech gadgets.

When Ben's wife dies, the family is determined to give her the funeral she wanted rather than the service her wealthy parents plan for her in the city.

Anti-capitalist Ben loves literature, as does Mortensen (the actor is the founder and editor of Perceval Press), and he used his own books as props. They included titles from Quebec poets as well as Noam Chomsky and Howard Zinn.

He also brought his own canoe, bicycles, plants, clothing and kitchen items to the set, where he lived before shooting.

Mortensen and the actors who play Ben's children went through a physical and intellectual boot camp of sorts a couple of weeks before shooting.

"We did rock climbing and martial arts and played a lot of music together and spent time together and did woodcraft, tracking, skinning, gutting animals," said Mortensen.

"You name it, we did everything, and by the time we got to the first day of shooting, we knew each other really well, we had a good shorthand, we knew and appreciated each other's strengths and weaknesses."

Mortensen said when he first read the script, he didn't know what to make of the title.

"And then I realized, I guess you could put a question mark after it, it's sort of tongue-incheek. It asks more questions than it answers. It posits that perhaps this is the greatest father in the world and then the next minute you're thinking, This guy is a menace to Still, he ascribes to some of Ben's views, including his matter-of-fact approach to communication.

Poor communication is a problem in many countries, said Mortensen.

He also laments those who use new technologies not to learn more about the world but "to reinforce their pre-existing ideologies or points of view in shallow ways."

"There's so much more that we could do and probably will, eventually," he added. "One thing is to go play Pokemon Go, and I guess there's nothing wrong with that. Another is to find out exactly what's going on in your government and your community and what people have done in the past when they've come up against obstacles of society, to communication, to war, poverty. There's a lot more that we can learn.

"So I guess this movie made me feel like it's worthwhile, life is short. I want to find out more. That's the way I feel anyway but it just reinforced it tenfold." THE CANADIAN PRESS

A thriller for the Pokémon Go generation

The makers of Catfish want to know if you have the Nerve

The invigorating new thriller Nerve goes deep into the psychology of the internet with an addictive game that's so fresh, you wonder whether the filmmakers had a tip that the Pokemon Go craze was on the horizon.

In the film, based on the 2012 Jeanne Ryan novel, Nerve is an app-based game that's all the rage among the kids.

You can choose to be a "player" or a "watcher." Players are given dares by anonymous masses of watchers with the promise of cash prizes at the end of each dare, which they have to film themselves doing - not dissimilar to Facebook Live or Periscope.

The dares can be as innocuous as kissing a stranger for five seconds. which is how Emma Roberts' square high school student Vee gets hooked up with Dave Franco's slightly older, slightly untrustworthy character Ian.

Or the dares can be as dangerous as dead-hanging off a high-rise.

Nerve is directed by Henry Joost and Ariel Schulman, the men who brought the world Catfish, that is-it-real, is-it-fake cultural phenomenon/documentary from 2010 about lying on the internet that birthed the popular television show.

They were excited to jump back into the current state of the internet. A lot has changed in six years, and Nerve almost makes Catfish look quaint.

"There have been a lot of movies that are fantasy or dystopian that take place in this world that you have to imagine. And we look around and we're kind of already living in a sci-fi movie with the technology that exists today and a lot of really simple things we take for granted," Joost said.

"We've gone so far beyond '1984' that it feels like we just had to tell a story about that."

They collaborated with everyone from teens to a former hacker for the CIA to develop technology that would look and feel believable "five minutes in the future," and also something that wouldn't look as though it required startup money.

The scariest part of Nerve is that the game is user generated and promulgated. There is no centre to attack once things start getting out of hand.

This was a change from the novel, which has a shadowy evil genius controlling everything.

"We realized what was actually more insidious and scarier and much harder to control and confront is if we're the bad guys," screenwriter Jessica Sharzer said. "It's more truthful to the way the internet works."

Beyond the drug-like thrills of the escalating dares, the film feels part Risky Business and part After Hours, as Vee and Ian team up to try to win the game - which is also incidentally a popularity contest.

Those with the most watchers get to advance.

But the stakes keep going up as more and more dares are completed.

"Just wait. Neither of us think it's necessarily a good idea for the game to exist, but it might be inevitable," Schulman said. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Colbert's legal waltz

After CBS Late Show host Stephen Colbert told viewers that lawyers representing his old Comedy Central show said he couldn't be Stephen Colbert anymore, he thumbed his nose at them.

Lawyers representing his old company complained to CBS after he revived the character he played under his own name on The Colbert Report - a clueless, full-of-himself cable news host. They said the character Stephen Colbert was their intellectual property. The audience booed when Colbert, "with a heavy heart," said it has been decreed the character is kaput. He then introduced Stephen Colbert's identical cousin, an interview with himself displaying the same

The burrata bonanza has been going strong for close to a decade now. I don't remember the first time I tried the pouch-like mozzarella stuffed with oozing cream and curd. But I do know it appeared in the form of a BLT on the cover of August 2007's Bon Appétit. That same year, the Toronto Star's Jennifer Bain wrote that it was "all the rage in New York and Los Angeles," and was "quietly making inroads here."

As far as I can tell, I first wrote about it in 2009, when Simon had a slight obsession with it and I had a beef with its price tag, close to $40 per sack, if I could even get my hands on one. Today, the Cheese Emporium gets in a regular shipment from Puglia (the heel of Italy's boot) every Tuesday, Come Sunday, they had two mini-burrata - about the size of tennis balls - left, which we happily picked up for $10 a piece. (Yes, we could've managed with one but that would be like trying to fairly split a poached egg: impossible.) We prepared them as we always do: with good tomatoes, olive oil, flakey Maldon salt, basil, and thick slices of grilled bread.

And, as always, there were moans of delight. But I've always wondered, with all the hoopla over exporting the precious cheese here ASAP, what are we missing out on when eating five-day-old cheese? My friend Giovanna, who was raised in Italy and is a chef in the city, once told me that burrata is eaten the same day it's made in Puglia or not at all because it gets more acidic the older it gets.

Kind of like Jason Bourne. The latest instalment, which opens Friday, sees director Paul Greengrass (The Bourne Supremacy and The Bourne Ultimatum) reunited with Matt Damon. It opens with a now middle-aged Bourne getting by in Greece by going fisticuffs with much larger men for money. But then CIA agent

Nicky Parsons (Julia Stiles) hacks the CIA and uncovers top secret files that will help Bourne better understand his past. Throw in a young billionaire who is concerned with his users' privacy on his social network "Deep Dream," a notyet-operational CIA surveillance program, "Iran Hand," a grumpy pants CIA director (Tommy Lee Jones) — the kind of guy whose vernacular about freedom and America is on par with Jack Nicholson's Col. Jessup from A Few Good Men, an ambitious new CIA Cyber Ops specialist (Alicia Vikander) and a reckless asset (Vincent Cassel) who has a personal vendetta against Bourne, and you've got plenty enough to sit back and enjoy the thrilling ride.

Sure, there are some hamfisted flashback scenes and plot devices, an epic-but-confusing car chase, and, at times, it felt like Bourne was like: Are you guys seriously after me again? I am literally not doing anything to bother you until you force me to use my skills. And that the CIA was like: Jason Bourne are you kidding me? Again?

But I don't care because yes, I've a strong affinity for this fictional CIA assassin (and Matt Damon.) And yes, I do own the Bourne Blu-Ray box set. Because unlike superheroes, there's the possibility, however slight, that I could have been Jason Bourne.

Or at least a middle-aged CSIS agent stationed in Italy who maxes out all her spy networks to score fresh burrata.

Pottermania reignites with latest book, play

HARRY POTTER

Cursed Child expected to be one of top sellers of 2016

Potterheads - those enrapt and obsessed with all things Harry Potter-related - have been waiting a long

Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows, the last book in the series, was published in 2007 before being split into two films, Part 1 in 2010 and Part 2 in 2011.

With Harry Potter and the Cursed Child set to officially open onstage Saturday and be released in book form on Sunday (the birthday of creator J.K. Rowling and Harry Potter himself), here are five things to know:

It's actually a play

The script is divided into two parts, written by Jack Thorne along with John Tiffany, who's directing the production in London's West End with the support, approval and assistance of Rowling herself.

2 19 years later

The story catches up to life with Harry 19 years after the end of Deathly Hallows. Married to sweetheart Ginny Weasley, Harry is now an overworked employee of the Ministry of Magic and father of three. The play opens on Platform 9 3/4 at King's Cross station as Harry bids farewell to his youngest son, Albus, heading for his first year at Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry at the age of 11.

Pre-orders galore

The book version is amassing impressive pre-orders from bookstores and online sites on both sides of the Atlantic, matching the same level of popularity of Deathly Hallows. Book sellers are confidently predicting it will be the top seller of 2016.

Taking centre stage

The play, which is sold out until May 2017 - with more dates to be added - has been generating huge buzz from both theatre critics and audiences. The casting of Noma Dumezweni, who is black, as Hermione raised some eyebrows but has the imprimatur of both Rowling and Emma Watson, who played the role in the films.

Another Potter-Malfoy feud?

Albus Severus - whose name is derived from two beloved characters, late headmaster Albus Dumbledore and enigmatic potions instructor Severus Snape - will attend Hogwarts with Scorpius Malfoy, whose father Draco was Harry Potter's main schoolyard adversary. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

When something old is new again

Re-watching favourite series is the ultimate ode

Adam Proteau Torstar News Service

So you've had a few weeks to recover from the season finale of Game of Thrones and you're considering what TV series to sink your energies into next.

It's not hyperbole to say you'll be hard-pressed to make a bad choice. With new seasons of dozens of established hits and new projects released almost every month of every year, you almost actively have to seek out subpar content to avoid watching a highquality show.

But here's a different suggestion: instead of trying something new, go back and rewatch a series you've already enjoyed.

Sure, you may know people who wouldn't dream of watching a series more than once, but nobody has a problem with those who return to museums and galleries to analyze the same works of art numerous times over their lives. There's a reason they do so and it's the same reason checking out a TV show more than once makes sense: your perspective changes with the passage of time and so does the society around you.

This is why rewatching The Wire after recent racial unrest is significantly different from seeing the HBO series for the first time. Or if you're interested in the TV drama industry itself, it's intriguing to rewatch a show and try pinpointing where things went wrong for a once-acclaimed series. (Looking directly at you, Season 4 of Dexter.)

The first time we consume a series, we're experiencing the events of the show without knowing how it concludes, and plot resolution is first and foremost on the minds of many, if not most, viewers. But in subsequent watches, we're fully aware of characters' fates and story arcs, and that presents us with the chance to ask questions other than ones that pertain to the plot.

For example: What subtle facial tic did we not pick up on the first time we watched an actor deliver a mesmerizing solilo-

There's a reason checking out a TV show more than once makes sense: Your perspective and society changes. That's why watching The Wire again after all the racial unrest is significantly different from seeing it for the first time. CONTRIBUTED quy? How did the director frame scenes to give them more weight and depth? In what ways did a soundtrack or lighting decision underscore the theme or drop hints of what was to follow?

It's impossible to answer all these questions the first time around. And so I'd argue a repeat viewing isn't only a solid option when it comes to fully appreciating a series; it's essential.

Besides, if we're being honest, while everyone is frantically live-tweeting and social mediaing each episode of a show in its initial airing, we're likely to look away from the big screen and miss a scene or two. Followup viewings allow us to take it all in, without any distractions or pressure to push through lest things be spoiled online.

There's no doubt rewatching a series can drastically reduce the number of shows an average individual engages with.

In some senses, that's a shame, as there is a wealth of tremendous dramatic product out there deserving of a large audience. But if you loved one particular story and somebody told you there was much more to love, wouldn't you race back to it as soon as possible?

If you knew showrunners went to great lengths to foreshadow and wink at viewers in all sorts of ways, isn't it incumbent on you to focus your attention on it more than once?

A memorable TV series is like a major metropolis: a vibrant, brilliant blur of images and sounds infused with a slew of fascinating stories. You can have a great time on vacation in both places, but a brief visit will never give you the full sense of what it means to live there. To come away with a richer and more accurate view, you need to return, seek out new avenues and tourist-free laneways, spend a little bit longer with the locals, experience all four seasons within city limits. That's what a rewatch gives you.

If a story is told well enough to leave you aching for more, you don't need to scratch the itch through sequels, prequels or spinoffs. Going back and having the same story told again is the ultimate sign of respect for it. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Billy Talent seen at their rehearsal/studio space as they prepare for a summer tour. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Billy Talent is breaking new ground, 23 years in

Even health issues can't keep this band of brothers down

Billy Talent is the very definition of a "band of brothers," with a 23-year history dating back to its four members' high school years in the Mississauga enclave of Streetsville.

For any band to carry on that long — through innumerable tour-bus flameouts and studio squabbles - with its original membership intact, is a truly heroic feat. It really doesn't happen that often.

Indeed, Billy Talent's last hometown gig, opening for Guns N' Roses before 50,000 at the Rogers Centre on July 16, provides a convenient point of comparison: GNR splintered into ruins a dozen years into its existence and subsequently spent 15 more as an exclusive plaything for Axl Rose before Slash and Duff McKagan returned to the fold for a "reunion" tour this summer. Mercury Rev might have put it best: "Bands, those funny little plans / That never work quite right."

Billy Talent nevertheless worked "quite right" for more than two decades, until drummer Aaron Solowoniuk - who first revealed that he'd been diagnosed with multiple sclerosis in 2006 — grudgingly conceded that the disease was getting the better of him and announced in a heartbreaking video in January he was taking time off the band he formed with vocalist Ben Kowalewicz, guitarist Ian D'Sa and bassist Jon Gallant under the name Pezz in 1993 to get well.

Sessions for the quartet's fifth album, Afraid of Heights, were beginning. Jordan Hastings, known for his sturdy work behind the kit for Say Yes and beloved St. Catharines hardcore heroes Alexisonfire, was handpicked to sit in his place.

"We were getting ready to go in the studio. We had 12 or 13 songs written and ready to go," recalls Solowoniuk, hanging with his lifelong friends in Billy Talent's east-end rehearsal studio a couple of days before their Rogers Centre date. "I had struggled through some shows in the summer and kind of pushed through it, and then it came to a point where I was just overdoing it, man.

"At that point, I was just having some MS symptoms of, like, blurred vision as I was playing drums. But then I pulled my back and Jon had to take me to get an MRI and they said 'Your back's messed up' and, at that point, I just kind of decided I needed to switch medicine, switch what I'm doing and I was like, 'I don't know how long it's gonna take and I want you guys to keep moving forward."

"So I gave Jordan a call to come in and learn the songs and record the songs, and tour with the band while I'm figuring out my health."

Given the platinum-or-better track record established by Billy Talent's first four albums here in Canada, that must have been a daunting challenge for Hastings to accept. "A little bit," he shrugs, having nonetheless learned the parts to every song on Afraid of Heights in a month and a half before recording commenced in the winter. He learned another 46 Billy Talent tunes since, to carry him through the international touring commitments that will keep the band busy in Australia, Japan, Europe (Billy Talent is huge in Germany), the U.K. and the U.S. through December.

"He didn't show it at all. He's a pro," says D'Sa.

"He didn't show it," affirms Gallant, who suddenly found himself half of a brand new rhythm section heading into Afraid of Heights. "And, for me, it was 25 years playing with the same drummer because Aaron was in the band I was in before this band. Ben, as well. So it was bizarre. It was really, really strange."

Kowalewicz is similarly blunt about the hole Solowoniuk's sudden departure tore through Billy Talent's family dynamic.

"It was devastating. It was the weirdest f-ing day ever," he says. "But Jordan is a great drummer and an amazing man who was very delicate and understood the nuances of what we were going through."

Solowoniuk, for his part, has far from left the picture. He was a perpetual presence in the studio, part spiritual adviser to Hastings and part video documentarian, during Afraid of Heights' creation, and he'll be hanging around on as many of the tour dates as he can following the record's July 29 release.

Olympian is a 'crazy cat lady'

PET PSYCHE

Long-distance runner Natasha Wodak speaks for her tabby

Long-distance runner Natasha Wodak loves her feline Sammy, a roughhousing mouser, in spite of his disdain for cleanliness

Most adoring pet owners would do anything for their cherished companions, but could they speak for their furry or feathered or finned friends and tell us what they are thinking? To find out, we're putting pet owners to the test with the personality questionnaire made famous by French novelist, Marcel Proust.

Among her peers, Natasha Wodak is affectionately known as the "crazy cat lady." The Canadian long-distance runner currently divides her time between training for the Summer Olympics in Rio, and volunteering at Vancouver Orphan Kitten Rescue Association. As the current national record holder in the 10,000 metres, Wodak is also known for donning cat ears and painting on whiskers to run in VOKRA half marathon fundraisers.

Adopted from the SPCA, Sammy has been Wodak's constant companion. "Mama's boy" Sammy feigns indifference when it comes to Wodak's accomplishments. Life for Sammy revolves around Weruva's BFF (Best Feline Friend) premium cat cuisine, roughhousing in the garden with Wodak's foster cat, Feeona, and hurling Bluetooth speakers off counters on a whim.

Sammy does, however, encourage everyone to cheer Wodak on during the 10,000 metre event in Rio de Janeiro on Aug. And on to the questionnaire.

What does Sammy consider his greatest achievement?

Probably that day last summer when he caught a mouse and brought it in to the house and dropped it in front of me - and we couldn't find it for the next 24 hours until 6 a.m. when it was running across my bedroom floor. That was a good achievement, he was pretty proud of himself.

What does Sammy consider the most overrated virtue?

Cleanliness. He doesn't give a s-t, his litter is everywhere. "Oh look, I've got s-t on my paws, I don't care, I'm going to walk on the bed now. Oh look, poo stuck to my bum, I'm going to wipe it on the floor."

What is Sammy's most marked characteristic?

He either loves you, or won't give you the time of day he's very snobby sometimes. And he's only really affectionate with me, so he makes me feel very special.

What is Sammy's greatest fear? That his food bowl will be empty.

Which talent would Sammy most like to have? He'd like to be able to feed himself and let himself out whenever he wanted - so to have thumbs so he could open the cupboard and the door.

What is the quality Sammy most likes in a woman?

That we're more caring so more likely to feed him when he wants, and give in to his meowing when he wants to go outside. He's got me wrapped around his little paws.

What is Sammy's most treasured possession?

Probably my pillow — he likes to sleep on it.

What would Sammy's favourite occupation be? A food critic.

What is Sammy's motto? YOLO (you only live once) do it up!" TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Damon's show not renewed by HBO

Project Greenlight won't be getting a fifth season on HBO.

Matt Damon told The Associated Press on Tuesday that he was shocked that HBO didn't pick up his and Ben Affleck's show, which chronicles the production of an independent film.

"I really liked it and thought the show went great," Damon said while promoting the latest "Jason Bourne" film, "I'm not one to question (their programming). They do such a great job. But we have to take it out again."

Damon says that that they'll start shopping the show around again, and he thinks that a streaming service like Amazon or Netflix might be a good fit.

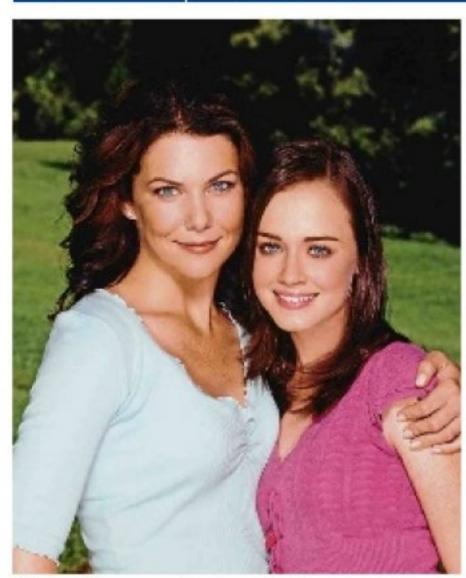

Project Greenlight aired on HBO for its first two seasons from 2001 to 2003, before moving to Bravo for season three in 2005. The show came back to HBO for a fourth season last year to much buzz and some controversy starting with Damon's comments regarding diversity, for which he later apologized. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Melissa McCarthy answered the call for Netflix's Gilmore Girls sequel and made magic again with star Lauren Graham, the show's creator said.

McCarthy's career has soared with movies including Bridesmaids and Ghostbusters since she played Sookie in the 2000-07 series, complicating efforts to fit taping into her busy schedule, said Amy Sherman-Palladino. But it was inevitable, she added.

"She's the same," she said. McCarthy and Graham "have a

Graham said the McCarthy-Graham bond the entire cast, including Alex-

"Everything was like, 'Oh, here's the chemistry we had cludes four 90-minute chapters that will debut globally on Nov. 25.

Cartoon pulled after character's Qur'an slip

Britain's Channel 5 has removed an episode of children's series Fireman Sam from its streaming site after a character appeared to tread on a page of the Qur'an.

HIT Entertainment, which produced the show, has apologized "unreservedly" for the incident and says it has cut ties with the animation studio responsible.

MUSICIANS TALK ABOUT TOURING WITH THE HIP

For young, largely Canadian musicians, touring with the Hip over the years has led to increased exposure and merchandise revenue, and the chance to hone their chops in front of larger than usual crowds. Here, musicians share their insights on touring with one of Canada's best loved live bands. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Sammy Kohn, The Watchmen

"They were very forthright in terms of stage sharing," says Kohn, second from right in photo. "It wasn't like they were this sort of unattainable, Rolling Stones-type band. They had this little sort of tune-up room with guitars, and Johnny (Fay) had this tiny little drum kit that he tours with. And I don't know how it happened but, somehow, Joey, Danny, Bobby Baker and I were jamming backstage and I was using Johnny's little toy kit. He'd probably never remember that, but it was super exciting for me. Frankly, we were pretty starstruck because they were so talented, charismatic and popular."

Joel Plaskett

"That first show we opened for the Hip, it was about knowing how rabid their fans are. This is a religion for some people in the way that Springsteen shows are. With that in mind, I knew that we had to come out swinging. I knew that Gord was there sidestage, as were a few of the other guys. And that lights a fire under your ass, when there are people you admire who have a vested interest in what kind of show you're putting on before them."

Sam Roberts

"It became evident from that first day that we weren't just going to be apprentices but friends too. In my mind, when you're in a band you have to keep your eyes open all the time and you have to learn from people who do things the right way and the wrong. And to a man, they all did it the right way. They welcomed us and shared their experience with us and we weren't just quarantined in 'opening band land."

Buck 65

"I thought, 'What in the world am I going to do to fill an arena?' It was just me, all by myself, but even more importantly, what do you have to do to hold your own when you're going to be playing every night with one of the greatest performers ever? When you're talking about the Tragically Hip, you know the crowd, with an exception of a handful of people, have seen them before. Before they come onstage, there are already expectations. I knew I was up against that. It would be really easy to get swallowed up. I knew I really had to step up and take it to another level as a performer if I were to stand a chance on the same stage."

Paul Murphy, Wintersleep

"The last show of the (World Container) tour was the smallest show. And I felt like, by a mile, it was their best show of that tour. They threw in some really weird songs, but it was a super electric show. We thought, Oh, we can draw 400 or 500 people to a show,' but then you see a band like that play to 400 people and it was this next-level thing. And we realized, 'Oh, this is why they are so good."

The Park Las Vegas

DISCOVER

Forget the Strip, this desert city is full of surprises

Nichole Jankowski For Metro Canada

It's easy to follow the madding crowd in Las Vegas - last year, three out of every four visitors stayed on the Strip.

A privately-owned monorail shuttles passengers the 6.4 kilometres between seven major hotels and casinos, while pedestrian bridges restrict as much as they facilitate movement by requiring those on foot to walk to wellseparated staircases and climb two stories just to cross Las Vegas Boulevard.

The Strip is designed so much with tourists in mind that, the story goes, when MGM built its mixed-use CityCenter it did not include a grocery store or school.

Outside of this stretch, however, there are neighbourhoods planning for community — this is the Las Vegas you'll want to take in when the buzz from your electric-guitar-sized togo cup starts to wear off.

First up is the Downtown Container Park, an open-air entertainment and shopping centre made of repurposed shipping containers, that opened in the East Fremont neighbourhood in 2013.

Entrepreneur Tony Hsieh put

$350 million into the project to renovate the municipality's true downtown. The small storefronts keep startup costs low, and shortterm leases and loans are available for new businesses. Inside the compound are specialty shops like Art Box, which sells the work of local artists and crafters; Simply Pure, a vegan and raw restaurant; and SasaSweets Chill Spot, famous for its artisan popsicles.

Gentrification is spotty, but a couple blocks west a few new bars have opened, including Park on Fremont and Commonwealth, and a renovated El Cortez Cabana Suites provides affordable accommodation despite not having access to the amenities of the Strip.

Abandoned buildings still dot the area, but locals are fighting back with Life is Beautiful. The music and arts festival, which runs Sept. 23-25, boasts headliners Mumford & Sons, The Lumineers and J. Cole this year. There's also a lineup of chefs and educational speakers, but it's the art that makes an impact year-round.

Internationally renowned street artists like D*Face, Borondo and Zio Ziegler are brought in to paint colourful murals on existing and shuttered businesses. These works have become a destination in > themselves and the foot traffic is said to be helping reduce crime in the area.

More recently, planners for Strip properties have taken note: the newly opened outdoor corridor between the New-York New-York and Monte Carlo resorts and the T-Mobile Arena offers a safe, walkable dining and entertainment district that includes public art; its centrepiece a 40-foot-tall sculpture of a dancing woman by artist Marco Cochrane.

To get the big picture, further down the Strip a London Eye-like ferris wheel called the High Roller offers a spectacular view that tops out at 550 feet. A full revolution takes 30 minutes, so head out just before sundown if you literally want to see change on the horizon.

Don't ignore the wear and tear on your feet

We live in an age where people counting their everyday steps have become the norm.

People spend an average of four hours each day on their feet taking approximately 8,000 to 10,000 steps daily - that's a lot of wear and tear on our feet, according to Edmonton Chiropractor Dr. Brian Gushaty.

"It's easy to forget about the part of our body that is taking the brunt of those steps, which is our feet. Many people may suffer from foot conditions and the repetitive stress can take a toll and worsen them," he explains.

Factor in the penchant for Canadians to wear flip flops or sandals during the spring and summer and you have a recipe for painful foot conditions.

"People may love to wear flip flops but they offer no arch support, heel cushioning or shock absorption and can lead to feet conditions like tendinitis."

Many people also suffer from plantar fasciitis - also known as jogger's heel - which is one of the most common causes of heel pain.

"The plantar fascia is the flat bed of tissue connecting the heel bone to the toes and supports the arch of the foot. If the plantar fascia is strained, it gets weak, swollen and inflamed. This causes the heel or bottom of the foot to hurt when standing or walking," Gushaty says.

Plantar fasciitis is characterized by sharp stabbing pain in the bottom of the foot near the heel. The pain worsens by bearing weight after long periods of rest. Individuals with plantar fasciitis often report their symptoms are most intense during their first steps after getting out of bed or after long periods of sitting.

There are factors that increase the risk of plantar fasciitis including age, exercise, faulty foot mechanics, excess weight, and occupations that involve a lot of standing.

While some foot conditions are obvious, many others need to be diagnosed and your chiropractor is able to perform a physical examination on your feet and may prescribe certain exercise, orthotics or even encourage

Leading urban destination for spa treatments

Spa treatments make amazing gifts for both men and women who want to treat themselves or each other to rejuvenation and relaxation of the mind, body and soul.

Santa Spa is the leading urban destination for spa treatments including relaxation and therapeutic massages, according to Sante Spa marketing director Christina Arthur Dick.

"You can never go wrong with a relaxing day at the spa and we offer a wide variety of services including our popular therapeutic and relaxation massage services," she says, adding that massage benefits extend beyond the physical.

"It not only feels good for the body but it also revitalizes the mind and soul, too. Massage can de-stress a person on another level, with the help of the powerful human touch, skin treatments and complete body overhaul."

And it's not just women who are turning to spas to recharge; more and more men are taking advantage of spa services, too. In fact, Conde Naste Traveler magazine stats show that 35 per cent of spa goers are actually male and the number is rising.

It's the perfect time to take advantage of the July special where clients can purchase two same-day treatments and receive 50 per cent off the second one until July 31 at Sante Spa, which is a boutique spa located at the top of the Hotel Le Germain in Downtown Calgary. #### Helping to treat tough skin conditions

For the thousands who suffer from it, rosacea can be very a very debilitating condition.

Rosacea is a condition in which certain facial blood vessels enlarge, giving the cheeks and nose a flush appearance while causing pain and discomfort for the sufferer. Also known as "brandy nose", rosacea is one of the most common skin conditions people suffer from but there is a highly effective remedy for it; according to Montreal-based distributor Canada Orient International Trade's spokesperson M Chen.

"Unlike a lot of skin products containing hormones, Jian Pai natural skin healer is 100 per cent natural and highly effective for not only brandy nose, but many other skin conditions, too," she says, adding that the product has a NPN issued by Health Canada. While there are a variety of treatments available, Jian Pai Skin Healer cream is considered one of the most effective.

"There was one sufferer who immigrated from China and dealt with brandy nose for over five years while trying many different medications that contained hormones but the problem re-occurred every time he stopped using the medication," Chen explains.

"He discovered Jian Pain natural skin healer last March then his condition cleared up in three days, his nose was normal within a month and he hasn't suffered again since."

Chen says Jian Pai cream helps heal or reduce various skin problems including athlete's foot and acne issues and is suitable for everyday use.

Get rid of those reading glasses

Imagine not having to pick up your reading glasses again just to enjoy your favourite book.

What used to sound impossible is now a reality for thousands of Canadians who otherwise would need reading glasses. A promising new treatment is now available at Gimbel Eye Centre, according to Chief Operating Officer Gregg Becker.

"The KAMRA inlay one of the newest treatments we at Gimbel are offering to address the age old challenge of eyes that come to need reading glasses," Becker explains. "This surgery basically reduces or eliminates the need for reading glasses for qualifying patients."

While the process is newer in Canada, it's been used in many other parts of the world including Europe and Japan for years.

The KAMRA inlay itself is a high-tech insert which is placed into the cornea of one eye in a simple, short and painless procedure, using the same laser technology as other procedures done at Gimbel, which have been used for decades

"I've had it done and it reduced my use of reading glasses by about 80 per cent," Becker adds.

Gimbel Eye Centre has been providing safe and high quality service for over 50 years in Alberta and continues to lead the industry in innovation.

"Our surgeons began practicing in the areas of cataract and refractive laser surgery when the field was relatively new and the procedures they pioneered are now common across the industry." For more information, please visit gimbel.com.

Change your thinking, change your life

A recent posting on Facebook said, "Sometimes the fear won't go away, so you'll have to do it afraid."

"That is a profound truth," says Dr. Pat Campbell, spiritual director of Calgary Centre for Spiritual Living. "Because sometimes the fear of doing something or going somewhere or trying something just doesn't go away. The feeling of fear is there, it's tangible, it feels real. And because feelings of fear are not pleasant, they often keep us from doing something we know we should be doing."

"Yet," Campbell says, "Sometimes we have felt the feelings, experienced the fear - and have done the thing anyway. We've done it without knowing the outcome, in spite of the butterflies, dread, shallow breath, racing heart, and tears."

"When we allow ourselves to do the thing, in spite of being afraid, and we make it to the other side - what happens is that we expand our view of what is possible. We can look at that thing that frightened us or stopped us, and know that it no longer has any power over us. We have transcended it. We move forward to the life that is awaiting us," she says.

These are the types of lessons and conversations that are common at the Centre for Spiritual Living, whether during Sunday Celebrations, weekly classes and discussion groups, or social events.

Their whole philosophy is based on the theory, "change your thinking, change your life."

Walker on path for major breakthrough

48th-ranked golfer grabs early lead with 5-under 65

A drab year for Jimmy Walker took a turn for the worse two weeks ago at the British Open, when he stayed in what was dubbed the "frat house" at Royal Troon with Jordan Spieth, Rickie Fowler, Justin Thomas, Jason Dufner and Zach Johnson.

Walker was the only one to miss the cut.

He still stayed the weekend. He just stayed away from the golf course, and his clubs. How does one kill time in such a small Scottish town?

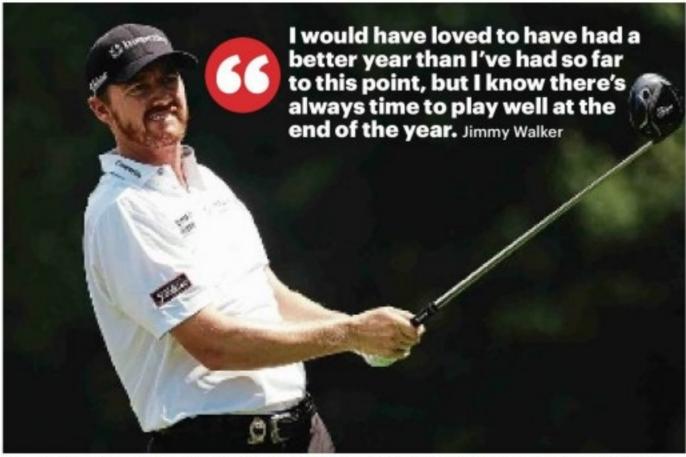

"When the first guy comes back and he's ready for a cocktail, you have one," Walker said.

Thursday in the PGA Championship, the drinks were on Walker.

In the final major of the year, Walker finally saw enough putts to fall at Baltusrol that he matched his low score in a major with a 5-under 65 and wound up leading a major for the first time in his career.

Just like that, a stale year came to life.

Walker had a one-shot lead over two-time major champion Martin Kaymer, Emiliano Grillo and Ross Fisher.

And for Henrik Stenson, a great year might get even better. Coming off his record performance at the British Open, the Swede had three birdies on the back nine as the sweltering heat gave way to dark clouds and 20 m.p.h. gusts. That gave him a 67, leaving him two shots behind. Stenson is trying to join Ben Hogan in 1953 as the only players to win back-to-back majors at age 40.

"It's going to be a great season for me," Stenson said. "But at the same time. I want to give myself a chance to try to make it the best season."

Walker's year has been so mediocre that he has finished within five shots of the winner only once this year, at Torrey

"I feel like all year it's just been real stale and stagnant," Walker said. "It's just ebbs and flows of golf. Just haven't been scoring ... It's frustrating. I would have loved to have had a better year than I've had so far to this point, but I know there's always time to play well at the end of the year."

Johnson stumbles out of the gates

Dustin Johnson

GETTY IMAGES

Dustin Johnson looked nothing like a major champion Thursday in the opening round of the PGA.

The U.S. Open winner shot 77, including three straight bogey 5s, two double bogeys, and a bogey 6 on the 18th hole that nearly everyone was birdie-

In all, Johnson beat five players, three of them club pros, and pretty much played his way out of contention while paired with British Open champ Henrik Stenson (3-under 67) and Masters winner Danny Willett (1 over).

Things went poorly from the start for Johnson, who just last week in the Canadian Open tied for second place, and has been on a tear for much of 2016. Aside from his emphatic victory at Oakmont for his first major, Johnson followed with a victory at Firestone and a ninth at the British Open. He also has made a tour-leading 25 consecutive PGA Tour

cuts

to the

Honda Classic in March 2015, which he immediately put behind him by winning at Doral. That Johnson was nowhere to be seen in the brutal heat at Baltusrol. He didn't wilt so much as fall apart pretty much from the outset.

Nothing worked. Not his prodigious driving skills; he was all over the place and hit only seven of 14 fairways. Not his scrambling; he even left a long bunker shot in the sand on No. 11. Not his approach shots; Johnson got on only 55.5 per cent of the greens in regulation.

And certainly not his putting. He ranked 138th on the greens.

His black attire seemed appropriate for such a round.

"He just didn't have a good day out there," Stenson said. "We all know what he's capable of doing with a golf ball and on a golf course. I'm sure he'll bounce back shortly."

Among his sounding boards was Pete Carroll, a guru of that other kind of football and coach of the NFL's Seattle Seahawks. A mutual friend teed up a meeting and Herdman made the drive from his Vancouver home to the Seahawks' home base.

TRAINING CAMP

Broncos focused on what lies ahead

Shortly after the Denver Broncos began training camp Thursday with Jay Z's On To The Next One blaring over the loudspeakers, their safeties and cornerbacks donned actual blinders.

"It's about focusing on one thing at a time and focusing on what you're supposed to be focused on," safety T.J. Ward said. "You're supposed to be reading the quarterback and supposed to have your eyes on the receiver. Just training your eyes."

Defensive backs coach Joe Woods wanted his guys to see what was in front of them and not be distracted by anything in the periphery.

It was an especially timely initiative given coach Gary Kubiak's opening-of-camp message to put Super Bowl 50 behind them and focus solely on what lies ahead.

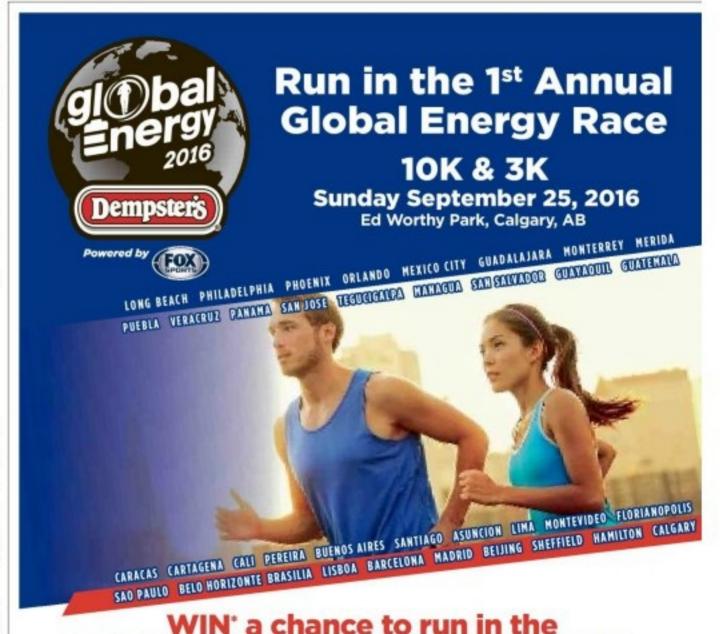

"I told them we're not defending anything; we're chasing the next one," Kubiak said.

Quarterback Trevor Siemian took the admonition to heart, declaring last year "was a heck of a ride. But that team's dead, so to speak."

The biggest question facing the champs is who will succeed Peyton Manning, who retired in March, 48 hours before his backup, Brock Osweiler, signed with Houston.

Mark Sanchez started Thursday and looked sharper than Siemian, a second-year pro who has the most experience in Kubiak's offence.

RECIPE Mushroom Melt with Pears

Ceri Marsh & Laura Keogh For Metro Canada

You can't deny the appeal of a grilled sandwich, and the addition of sweet pears only makes this oozy melt more appealing.

Ready in

Prep time: 5 minutes Cook time: 10 minutes Makes: 1 serving

Ingredients

- Pumpernickel Bread
- butter
- Dijon mustard (optional)
- · cremini mushrooms, thinly sliced pears, thinly sliced
- Fontina cheese, grated

Directions

1. In a skillet, melt a pat of butter over medium heat. Toss in your sliced mushrooms and push them around until they soften up. Remove from pan and set aside. Wipe out your pan.

2. Butter the bread (and swipe the other side with a bit of Dijon for adventurous kids or adults) and place each piece in the pan, butter side down. Place a good handful of Fontina on each, then press down a couple of slices of pear, followed by a good spoonful of mushrooms. Place another piece of Pumpernickel on top, butter side out. Let that sizzle away for 2 or 3 minutes, peaking at the underside using a spatula to see that your bread is toasting not burning. Flip it.

Allow the sandwich to grill for a couple more minutes then remove from the heat. Cut in half and serve warm.

Gemini May 22 - June 21 Don't try to win an argument today. Don't try to make a point. Demonstrate grace under pressure. Be a role model for others.

Cancer June 22 - July 23 Money squabbles are likely today, especially over children or social situations. Money is always a tricky thing between friends and romantic partners.

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23 Most people are touchy and irritable today, which is why you have to tread carefully. You might feel that you have to defend your ideas or beliefs when talking to someone. Oh well.

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23 Something going on behind the scenes might annoy you or become annoying for someone else. Assume nothing. Be prepared to smoothtalk your way out of something.

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23 Quarrels with friends or members of groups might occur today. Think of the downside, especially for the future. Don't make a scene. Anger serves no purpose other than to make everyone other miserable.

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22 You might be intimidated by someone in a position of power today because he or she is rude or coming on strong. That's his or her problem. You don't have to react.

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21 Do not preach or proselytize to others today because it won't work. People will object. In fact, some people are waiting for an excuse to fight. Don't give it to them.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20 Postpone discussions about shared property and inheritances for another day, because something will go south fast today. Easy does it.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19 It's not easy dealing with people today, especially bosses and partners. Before you know it, they are at loggerheads. Run away! Run away!

) Pisces

Feb. 20 - March 20 Another argumentative day! The difference today is that arguments will likely take place at work. Chill out. Stay on good terms with co-workers because you have to work with them tomorrow and tomorrow and tomorrow.

PRAYER IS THE MASTER KEY

Every problem requires different approach. There are some problems that should be handled with intensity. Even our Lord Jesus Christ realized this fact when he told His disciples, "But this kind does not go except by prayer and fasting" (Matthew 17: 21 AMP). Even where it seems no solution is forthcoming do not give up, but continue in prayer and the Lord will answer you.
